

A half-day business simulation for your team — and a written list of what to change on Monday.

A facilitated simulation: six to eighteen people make resource decisions under time pressure, with limited information and competing goals. The last part of the session takes apart what they decided and why.

Role map and the “red zones” of communication	who does what, and where it broke during play
5–7 actionable process improvements	a backlog the team wrote itself, with owners

HOW ORDERING WORKS

1. Enquiry — form or email. Tell us the team size, the format you think fits, and the window of dates.
2. A 30-minute briefing call. This is the only preparation we need from you: what the team does, what is going wrong, what you want to be different afterwards. Out of this we agree the 2–3 metrics to check before and after.
3. A written offer: format, duration, group size, location, what we bring, what you provide, price.
4. The session.
5. The retrospective document — the outputs above, in writing, sent to you.
6. The re-check, on the metrics agreed at step 2, on the date agreed at step 2.
